Ten Warning Signs: Your Older Family Member May Need Help

The Eldercare Locator, a public service of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Administration on Aging, has produced a guide of "10 warning signs" to help families and older Americans determine if help is needed. Any one of the behaviors listed may or may not indicate that an action should be taken and your family member's physician should be kept informed of physical or psychological behavior changes.

Has your family member:

- ❑ Changed eating habits within the last year resulting in weight loss, having no appetite, or missed meals?
- ❑ Neglected personal hygiene resulting in wearing dirty clothes, body odor, bad breath, neglected nails and teeth, sores on the skin?
- ❑ Neglected their home so it is not as clean or sanitary as you remember growing up?
- ❑ Exhibited inappropriate behavior by being unusually loud or quiet, paranoid, agitated, making phone calls at all hours?
- ❑ Changed relationship patterns such that friends and neighbors have expressed concerns?
- ❑ Had physical problems such as burns or injury marks resulting from general weakness, forgetfulness, or possible misuse of alcohol or prescribed medications?
- ❑ Decreased or stopped participating in activities that were previously important to them such as bridge or a book club, dining with friends, or attending religious services?
- ❑ Exhibited forgetfulness resulting in unopened mail, piling newspapers, not filling their prescriptions, or missed appointments?
- ❑ Mishandled finances such as not paying bills, losing money, paying bills twice or more, or hiding money?
- ❑ Made unusual purchases such as buying more than one magazine subscription of the same magazine, entered an unusual amount of contests, increased usage of purchasing from television advertisements?

MANAGING STRESS OF CAREGIVING

Work within your own limits of energy, time, and know-how

Take time to relax

- Eliminate the “Should’s” and “If only I had time” statements. Ease up on yourself by praising what you do accomplish. Don’t expect more than your human abilities allow.
 - Set aside time each day for yourself, no matter how small.
 - Rest your mind frequently with short breaks to look at flowers or a tree, breathe deeply, or visualize a peaceful beautiful place from memory.
 - Keep a journal of feelings. Note in detail the things you have done to ease your loved one’s burden.
 - Have an understanding friend whom you can call or visit when you need a lift.
 - Join a support group or seek counseling.
 - Allow quiet time for prayer or meditation.
- ❖ Add humor to your life
- Buy a page-a-day calendar with cartoons.
 - Read the daily comics in the newspaper.
 - Share laughter with your loved one.
 - Rent comic movies or cassette tapes.
 - Ask friends to save jokes and cartoons for you.

BALANCING CAREGIVING NEEDS AND SELF NEEDS

You are the only one who can meet your needs

Who are you beyond the caregiving role?

Does your self worth come from the need to be needed?

How will you use your time when the role ends?

What you can do for yourself

- Maintain outside interests.
- Nurture your sense of purpose and worth,
- Create activities to look forward to for yourself.
- Take care of your physical and emotional needs.
- Take care of your appearance.
- Have one part of your life that is just yours, away from the caregiving role.
- Have several activities, which you turn to for “in-house vacations”.
- Indulge yourself with a treat now and then.
- Surround yourself with people who understand.
- Join a support group or counseling sessions.
- When possible, talk about your anger or feelings with the person who is ill.

Taken from Keys to Survival for Caregivers by Mary K. Kouri, Ph.D.

Compiled by Louanne Kane, M.S.

COMMUNICATION TECHNIQUES

- “I’d like to talk about the appreciation’s and the regrets both of us have in this relationship. Are you willing to set aside a time when we could do that soon?”
- Suggest that you take turns talking and that each of you agrees not to interrupt the other.
- Ask directly for what you want, for example, “Will you forgive me for that?” or “Will you reassure me that you love me?”
- Use “I” messages such as, “I feel...” or “I want..” or “I think.” rather than “You made me...” or “You always..” or “You should.”
- Remember that human emotions are harmless in themselves and they don’t necessarily conform to logic. In their actions, however, people can choose to channel their feeling into behaviors that uphold their personal and moral values and maintain mutual respect. When your thinking is muddled by strong negative emotions, pause and breathe deeply while you regain your clear-headedness.
- Look the other person in the eye and listen as he talks. It’s an opportunity to learn about yourself and your loved one. Often there are astonishing differences in the way two people experience the same event.
- If the ill person becomes insulting or abusive, say, “I want to talk with you, but I won’t listen to hurtful remarks.” If the person continues, say, “I’ll come back after you are finished saying hurtful things”, and leave the room.
- Be as generous as you can in expressing your appreciation about the relationship.

Barriers to Communication

- Backing the other person into an emotional corner by saying, “You should have” or “Why did you” or “If you loved me”.
- Challenging the other person’s reasons/rights to feel as he/she does.
- Hiding your tears.
- Defending your reasons or rights to feel as you do.
- Saying things you might regret later.

ANGER AND CAREGIVING

Sources of Anger

- Long-standing, unresolved conflicts with the care receiver.
- Disagreements with the care receiver or family member regarding caregiving or treatment.
- The ill persons irritating habits and personality traits that might be exaggerated by illness.
- Your sense of helplessness in alleviating these loved person's pain or suffering.
- Your plans, goals, or expectations that are delayed or dashed as you devote yourself to caregiving.
- The duration, difficulty, or expense of caregiving.

Mismanaged Anger

- Spewing accusations, threats, or guilt-provoking tirades on family members, friends, the sick person, or care providers.
- Using physical force on the ill person.
- Denying that anger.
- Telling others about the problem instead of discussing it with the person involved.
- Seething and turning your anger inward to cause headaches, or other physical problems.

Constructive Management

- Admit the anger, you can control how you channel it into action.
- ❖ Develop a variety of safety valves.
 - Phone calls to friends who understand.
 - Support group meetings.
 - Brisk physical activity.
 - Write a letter expressing the anger and destroy it.
 - Schedule frequent breaks from caregiving activities.
- Explore solutions to the problem(s) with your loved one (s), if possible.
- ❖ Ask what you need at this moment that you are not getting.
 - Make direct requests or look for ways you can meet your needs.

GUILT AND CAREGIVING

Differentiate between Legitimate Guilt, the remorse of deliberate wrongdoing or hurtful actions and Superfluous Guilt, self-reproach for imagined wrongdoings of human failings.

Guilt Reduction Techniques

Legitimate Guilt

- Recognize and validate your feelings of frustration and overload.
- Stop punishing yourself; instead use this situation as a learning experience to motivate you to plan alternative responses in the future.
- Rehearse the new behavior in advance.
- Offer an apology to your loved one, offer an expression of regret for your behavior and an explanation of what you will do differently in the future.
- Forgive yourself.

Superfluous guilt Recognize your unrealistic standards or falsehoods such as:

- You can do all things “perfectly”.
- You might improve the sick person’s lot by sacrificing your well-being.
- The misconceptions that entertaining negative thoughts or mischievous wishes will make them come true.
- The myth that misfortunes in people’s lives are punishments for wrongdoing.
- The idea that you should not get angry.
- The illusion that you can control your loved one’s fate.

Consider

- Joining a caregivers support group.
- Wishes and fantasies are harmless, unless you put them into action or punish yourself for having them.
- Make an exhaustive list of all your guilt(s).
- Choose items you want to change while maintaining a balance between your well-being and that of your loved one.
- Forgive yourself for your human imperfections.

GRIEF AND CAREGIVING

Losses that relate to Caregiving:

- Your loved one's health and vigor
- Some of your loved one's endearing personality traits
- Activities or interest you enjoyed together
- Plans and optimistic expectations for the future
- Your sense of security
- Time, energy, or money to engage in your special interests
- A pleasant daily routine
- Confidence in your ability to steer events in your life toward favorable outcomes

Fear of the future:

- More disability or pain for your loved one
- Increasing loneliness
- Less time for yourself
- Doubts about your own health
- Lack of confidence in your ability to cope with stress and emotional pain
- Anticipated emptiness when your loved one dies

Ineffective coping:

- Physical pain, irritability and panic attacks
- Distance emotionally from your loved one
- Devote self to caretaking at the expense of your own well-being

Effective Ways:

- Talk about your feelings and thoughts
- Join a support group
- You aren't alone, anything you feel, think or wish, has been experienced by others
- Your choices in how you act on your wishes, thoughts, and feelings will determine how effectively you manage your grief
