How Many Certificates Do I need?

When someone dies, their assets are typically frozen and access to these assets are blocked.
(One exception to this is joint spousal accounts, wherein the asset defaults to the surviving spouse.)

An executor will need probate certificates (Surrogate Certificates), which are different than death certificates, to prove to an institution (bank, DMV, etc.) that they have the authority to access a decedent's assets.

An executor should not need to present a probate certificate for debts.

*Joint Spousal assets usually do not require a certificate, they typically default to the surviving spouse.

One certificate is included in your probate fee; additional certificates are $5.00 each

ASSETS	DO I NEED A CERTIFICATE?
Real Estate	Yes; 1 per property
Titled Vehicles (DMV) Cars/Trucks/Trailers/Boats/Planes/Mobile Home/Jet-Ski, Etc.	Yes; 1 per title
Bank Accounts Checking/Savings/CDs	Yes; 1 per bank (not per account)
Investments/Stocks/Bonds	Yes; 1 per financial institution (not per account)
Retirement Accounts/Pensions	Only if there is no beneficiary listed
Life Insurance Policies	Only if there is no beneficiary listed
Safe Deposit Box	Yes, if you are not named as co-owner on box
Personal Property	No

Don't go overboard with extra certificates because in some cases they can expire in time based on the rules of the asset-holder you are dealing with. You can always request more certificates from the Surrogate's Court as needed.
